

Accessing Public Services in Scotland:

A problem-solving toolkit

UNIVERSITY OF LEEDS

CEREBRA
Working wonders for children with brain conditions

Working wonders for children with brain conditions

Families where a child has a brain condition face challenges every day. Just to learn, play, make friends and experience the world can feel difficult, even impossible. But we don't believe there's any challenge that can't be overcome.

So we listen to families, we learn from them. We carry out research, we design and innovate, we make and share. From new equipment to new learning resources, to new ways to play and support each other, everything we find out together makes life better. It opens doors to discovering the world.

It's an incredibly rewarding journey for everyone involved. Why not be a part of it? You never know what we'll discover together.

www.cerebra.org.uk

Our guides for parents help you find the answers you need. You can view and download the full series of our guides and factsheets completely free from our website www.cerebra.org.uk.

If you would like to make a donation to help cover the cost of producing our guides give us a call on 01267 244216 or donate at <https://cerebra.org.uk/get-involved/donate/>.

Thank you.

Contents

Introduction	5
Categories of dispute	6
Myth Buster	7
Key factors	8
1. Inter-agency disputes	13
2. No such word as “can’t”	15
3. The budget is spent	17
4. The panel/manager says “no”	18
5. Too difficult to think about	19
6. Delay	20
7. “I don’t have authority to ...”	21
8. Personalities	22
9. Highly contested fact disputes	23
Preparing for a meeting	24
Jargon Buster	25
What must public bodies do?	30
Precedent letters	31
Real Snakes and Fantasy Ladders	38

Written by Luke Clements

Illustrations by Gillian Clements

This edition written by Donna M Morgan

This toolkit emerges from a research programme funded by the charity Cerebra. Cerebra is the charity dedicated to helping families with children with brain conditions discover a better life together.

In the writing and editing of this toolkit we have benefited greatly from those who have helped develop the ideas in the Guide, and provided constructive feedback on the drafts. We are particularly grateful to Alison Thompson, Claire King, Dawn Cavanagh, Karin Crimmins, Lisa Reakes, Marie Macey, Sian Taylor and Wendy Merchant, our Cerebra Family Research Ambassador pilot members.

Very special thanks are also due to:

- Tracy Elliott, Beverley Hitchcock and Carys Hughes and all Cerebra colleagues who have helped us overcome teething problems and throughout have been wonderfully positive and imaginative;
- Professor Julie Price, Jason Tucker and Sharon Howley of Cardiff Law School; and
- Glenn Storhaug for his skill in manipulating the graphics.
- Iain Nisbet for reviewing the Scottish version.

© Luke Clements, Cerebra Professor of Law and Social Justice, Leeds Law School, Leeds University.

First published in 2016 with financial support from Cerebra and the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC).

This is the third edition of the guide, edited specifically for use in Scotland. We need your comments, criticisms and advice on how it can be improved; particularly on what you have found to 'work' when trying to solve a problem you have encountered with a statutory body, such as social services, the NHS and the education service.

Please send your comments and suggestions to Professor Luke Clements at: LJ.Clements@leeds.ac.uk

Introduction

This guide aims to support children and young people with disabilities and/or additional support needs and their carers, as well as their families and advisers, who are encountering difficulties with the statutory agencies in relation to the provision of health, social care and education support services.

Scots law provides powerful rights to education and support from other services, but this alone is insufficient. The law can be complicated and difficult to understand. Even when you know what your rights are, it can be daunting, exhausting and sometimes intimidating to challenge public officials. There is a power imbalance and much research establishes that many families are fearful that complaining may make things worse.

This guide aims to help unpick these problems, to develop effective strategies for resolving them and to keep your blood pressure within safe limits. It is based on the idea that it is not in the interests of public bodies to have these commonly occurring problems and that most such problems are capable of being resolved without lawyers and without great expense to the public body.

In the pages that follow, this toolkit considers a number of general categories of dispute, suggests how these can be resolved and identifies key factors that empower people to claim their rights and to challenge failures when they occur.

Categories of dispute

It is important to consider your problem from the perspective of the public body in order to understand why it may have arisen: what is it about the case that creates the particular difficulty? Different types of problem generally require different problem-solving approaches. The categories listed below are considered in greater detail in the subsequent pages of this toolkit.

1. Inter-agency disputes

In disputes of this kind, the problem is not whether the child/young person or carer has additional support needs and/or a disability or that he or she has need of assistance, but which agency is responsible (see page 13).

2. We don't do/we can't do that

The public body has a rigid policy – 'we don't do this' – we 'can't do that' (see page 15).

3. The budget is spent

It is agreed that the child/young person/carers has a need, but the public body won't meet that need because of a 'shortage of resources' (see page 17).

4. The panel (or manager) says "no"

The person you deal with is sympathetic, but their manager or a 'panel' says "No" (see page 18).

5. Too difficult to think about

The case is complex and needs an 'out of the ordinary' response but this requires skills that the public body lacks or it simply has insufficient time to devote to it (see page 19).

6. Delay

The public body is not dealing with the problem – perhaps because staff have excessive caseloads; are going off sick; are short term 'agency' staff etc (see page 20).

7. "I don't have authority to..."

There is general agreement that the child/young person/carers has needs which should be met – but no-one has the power to make it actually happen (see page 21).

8. Personalities

A personality clash: the decision maker has autocratic tendencies and/or the public body has labelled the child/young person/carer as 'difficult' (see page 22).

9. A highly contested fact dispute.

This often occurs where there is a 'history' to the dispute and the facts are hotly contested by both sides (see page 23).

Myth Buster

Many people who work for public bodies and many parents of children or young people with additional support needs and/or a disability misunderstand the law. Many 'myths' develop – a few of which are listed below – and each of these is considered in subsequent pages.

- you have to have a diagnosis to get support (page 26);
- you can't get school transport if you live within three miles of the school (page 29);
- if your IQ is 70 or more you can't get help (page 27);
- CAMHS don't support children with Autism or ADHD (page 26);
- children with disabilities get two hours respite a week (page 29);
- you don't have a right to Direct Payments (page 26);
- you can't pay your relatives with a Direct Payment (page 26);
- there is a maximum number of hours you can get with a short break/Direct Payment support (pages 26 and 29);
- you don't get help with travel costs if you are receiving the mobility component of DLA or PIP (page 29);
- there is an upper limit on the amount of a personal budget (page 28);
- you don't have a right to a separate carer's assessment (page 25).

Key factors

(1) Support

Our preliminary research suggests that having support is generally the most important factor: emotional support; support in advising how to proceed; support in the sense of 'external validation'; support in empowering you to persevere – and so much more.

Simply being told that you are being treated badly is an enormous help. It validates your experience and makes you realise it's not you being unrealistic. Knowing that other people have experienced the same problem and considered it unreasonable can challenge a sense of isolation – that you are not alone with this particular problem.

The internet has proved to be one of the greatest advances in support over the last 20 years. For anyone in need of advice and support, an excellent first step is to use social media/support forums/self-help groups through Facebook; Twitter; Mumsnet; Contact a Family and so on. Simply posting a question such as "Has anyone ever had this problem ..." or "Does anyone have any advice on what to do about ..." etc will often produce a lot of responses – many probably not terribly useful – but among these will often be an answer or a link to a resource that helps. However, the fact that people respond is just as important – that people empower you and encourage you to persevere. It is this factor that our preliminary research has identified as one of the most crucial elements in helping to overcome many of the daunting barriers that people encounter when trying to access decent support services. But just be cautious of who might be reading when posting on social media and do not disclose your child's identity.

(2) Knowing your rights

Knowing what you and your child are entitled to is of great significance: it is empowering and creates a sense of legitimacy – that you are not seeking special treatment or making unreasonable claims. The way this knowledge is communicated to the public body is of great importance (see key factors 7 and 9 below). It can empower sympathetic colleagues who would like to help advance your case and can often 'illuminate': not everyone is an expert on the law – even those who work in education, health and social care bodies. In addition to the jargon buster (page 25), the website mentioned on page 7 aims to help you better understand your rights.

(3) The letterhead effect

Our research also indicates that if you can have support from a person or organisation with some status – and one with a 'letterhead' – this too makes a significant difference. Not infrequently we have seen public bodies fail to act on excellent letters written by families – letters that describe in detail: (1) the nature of the problem they face; (2) the relevant law and policy; and (3) what has been done wrong and what corrective action needs to be taken. When, however, the same public body is sent a parallel letter on the letterhead of a respected legal practice or charity, MSP, or occasionally head teachers will provide a supporting letter, then often things change.

Our research has not yet identified exactly why support from a third party has the potential to make such a difference.¹ Relationships between officers and parents can often be long-standing and complex, and it may well be that the observations of a 'neutral bystander' can create an opportunity for the public body to look again and more objectively (or from a different perspective) at a particular situation.

One useful technique to obtain such validation from a third party is to write to them asking a question you already know the answer to (i.e. 'is it unlawful for an authority to have a blanket policy not to provide'). The involvement of a third party can also help you think 'objectively' about the particular problem. It can help you to be more organised and to focus on the core concerns (and to put to one side peripheral issues – see key factor 8 below).

(4) Get it in writing

It is vital to keep written records, to make diary notes and to get the public body to 'put in writing' what it is saying. The facts of your situation – the evidence of what your needs are and the harm that may result if these needs are not met – are crucial. Mahatma Gandhi (who was a barrister in his early years) believed that if you 'take care of the facts of a case, the law will take care of itself'. Although our preliminary research suggests that this may not always be the case, it is nevertheless sound advice.

¹ Academically this is referred to as 'credentialism' – ie an excessive reliance on credentials.

A case based on strong evidence is much more likely to succeed than one where the evidence is weak. It is, however, important to get the facts written down and if possible to get third parties (e.g. friends, family, neighbours, MSPs, councillors, priests, nurses, teachers, support staff and professionals) to write letters endorsing this evidence and spelling out how important it is that the public body acts in the way you want it to.

(5) Recording key dates and promises

Delay is one of the greatest problems people face in accessing their statutory entitlements. Things 'drift': people go on holiday; people go off sick; people change jobs; and unexpected things happen like the summer holidays, 18th birthdays and Christmas. Promises made in good faith are not honoured for all sorts of understandable reasons and are then replaced by other equally well-meant undertakings – which again don't materialise. In this way months – indeed years – may pass and you are still waiting. Needs don't wait: children don't stop growing, children don't hang around while the public body gets itself sorted. By the time the public body finally gets its act together your needs will probably have changed and reassessment is likely to be required.

You are then in familiar territory – an 'impossible position'. Do you go back to square one and start the process anew or refuse and be branded uncooperative? We have a precedent letter for this situation (see page 35) – but it is an unenviable dilemma and best avoided by challenging 'drift' as soon as you can. This means making diary notes of dates by which agreed action is to be taken and challenging any failure to meet these deadlines. 'Drift' happens when deadlines are missed but everyone hopes and believes that the problem will be addressed – and so in its initial stages it goes unrecorded. Generally it is sensible to complain early (but politely): at page 31 we have a precedent letter to deal with this.

(6) Recording 'things said'

Not infrequently you may be told something by a public official – in a telephone conversation or during a meeting—that is either crucial or troubling (or both). It might be a promise that something will be done or a statement to the effect that your request is simply out of the question: that “we don’t do ...”. As this guide notes (see page 15), public bodies are seldom able to use the ‘can’t’/‘don’t’ words. There is little that they can’t do – and it is generally unlawful for them to have ‘blanket’ policies. Sometimes a throwaway comment may sound like a threat: for example, “if you do that we may withdraw your services” or “we are under no obligation to care for your son, you know” or “if we give it to you we have got to take it away from someone else”.²

Whenever such a crucial or troubling comment is made, it is important to get this confirmed in writing. This can be difficult as public bodies may be reluctant to do this. In such cases a letter or an email along the lines of precedent letter number 3 on page 33 of this guide can be effective, since it will be evidence of what was said (unless a response is received from the public body clarifying the position).

(7) Putting it succinctly

When asking a public body to do something or when making a complaint, it is important to set out as succinctly as possible, the key facts, the key problems and what you want to happen. While it is important to identify past failures, it is generally best to devote most energy in spelling out what you require to be done. We can debate what the average human attention span is (some research suggests it is shorter than a goldfish’s) but many of us glaze over when confronted by a long email or by a letter of more than a page or two (and we frequently put it ‘on the side of the desk’—see page 19).

² These are examples taken from Ken Simons “I’m not complaining. But ...” (Joseph Rowntree Foundation 1995).

Letters and emails should be as short as possible and structured (using numbers or bullet points for lists etc). If possible, condense your case into one or two pages – and if needs be, have an annex where the detail is set out at greater length. The letter should identify:

- the problems;
- the key facts;
- where the public body has gone wrong (briefly);
- what it needs to do to put things right;
- a reasonable timescale in which this should be done; and (if relevant)
- the action that needs to be taken in the short term whilst this corrective action is being taken (i.e. interim services/support).

The precedent letters at the end of this toolkit and also the more extensive library of template letters on the Cerebra website³ are useful examples of letters that can be written to public bodies, including how they can be asked to take action to remedy a particular problem.

(8) Parking peripheral questions

This toolkit emphasises the importance of considering a case from the perspective of the public body; appreciating the pressure staff are working under, both in terms of caseloads and the diktats they receive from their senior officers and members. Seeing the issue from a different perspective can help identify the particular barrier that is blocking a resolution. The process is generally easier when there is a willingness to accept that the public body's approach might not be unreasonable, for example, if it disagrees about some of the evidence. As we note on page 23, one of the most difficult types of case to deal with is where the evidence is 'highly contested'.

³ See <https://cerebra.org.uk/get-advice-support/legal-and-financial/template-letters/>

In order to avoid getting into this situation it can be helpful to 'put to one side' (or 'to park') disputed facts which are not of central relevance to the solution. For example – the fact that a staff member alleges they returned a telephone call (when you are sure they didn't) may be infuriating – but it is unlikely to be central to the issue of when the authority is going to do what you want them to do. The key aim is to get the support and if this can be done by agreeing 'to park' a particular disputed issue, then this should be considered. This does not mean accepting that the public body is right – it merely requires that for the purpose of getting a solution, this can be left to one side, to be considered at a later date (if needs be).

(9) Helpful words/quotes

The research programme's preliminary findings suggest that there are some words/quotes that can be particularly useful to use (but not overuse) in letters/emails.

Snippets of law

Quoting a snippet of law or government policy seems to make a difference in many cases. It is a bit like showing the 'instruments of torture': in effect communicating to the public body that you are aware of the law and if things are not resolved, then this is an option you might consider. The aim of this toolkit is to avoid having to take legal action – having to resort to the unpredictable, expensive, time-consuming and frequently disempowering legal system. However, the law is important and a short legal reference will not go amiss. The following pages of this toolkit have a few footnotes quoting legal extracts. These are the type of 'snippet' that might be included in a letter.

At page 7, we provide details of how to find further information on specific rights and these guides contain similar footnotes of the type that make for good 'snippets'.

A cautionary note however: quoting the wrong law or too much law can have the opposite effect – council staff may 'glaze over' and assume (if the law is misquoted) that the rest of the letter is irrelevant too, or that it's too difficult an issue to deal with. If you are unsure of the position it is worth seeking out a specialist in this area for advice.

Maladministration

'Maladministration' can be a useful word to use, not least because most spellcheckers can identify it! As we note in the jargon buster (page 27) it means that the Scottish Public Services Ombudsman (SPSO) or 'Ombudsman' (on page 29) would consider the behaviour of the public body to be unreasonable. The Ombudsman in Scotland can also investigate service failure. The Scottish Public Services Ombudsman (SPSO) is the final stage for complaints about councils, the National Health Service, colleges and universities, Scottish Government among others. The Ombudsman works independently. The Ombudsman is not someone public bodies want to annoy – they must publicise any Ombudsman finding against them. The Ombudsman makes recommendations where something has gone wrong, to help put things right and to try to stop the same thing happening to someone else. Recommendations are normally followed and the Ombudsman will follow up matters to ensure compliance.

The Ombudsman cannot recommend financial compensation. There is no fee for complaining to the Ombudsman and if the investigator chooses, he or she can require the production of documentation⁴.

Fettering of a discretion

This is a useful phrase to use where a public body has a fixed policy – i.e. 'we don't do'/'we can't do that'. This is considered further on page 15 (and see jargon buster page 27).

Monitoring Officer

Some of the precedent letters referred to in this toolkit and the further resources (see page 7) make mention of the local authority's 'Monitoring Officer'. As the jargon buster explains

(page 27), every local authority must have such a person – whose job is to ensure that their authority does not act in a way that might amount to maladministration. By addressing a letter to the Monitoring Officer you are not only communicating the fact that you are aware of the law, but also that you require a senior council official to review your problem. Most complaints made to public bodies are not routinely considered by their lawyers: they are dealt with by officers in the particular department. Not infrequently on seeing the letter, the monitoring officer will explain to their departmental colleagues that they have misunderstood the law/applied an outdated policy etc. Provided the letter making the representation has been drafted in reasonable terms (i.e. giving the authority scope for changing its decision without loss of face) this can be effective and result in an early resolution.

In the Cerebra research (conducted in England and Wales), we have come across public bodies that have applied inflexible policies concerning (for example) the provision of continence pads or school transport for disabled children.⁵ In these cases the persons who made these decisions most probably believed that they were applying the law/policy correctly. It was only when the policy was considered by the public body's lawyer that she or he learned that they were mistaken about the law/policy in question. You may wish to ask education officials to check the legal position with their legal services department (or consult a solicitor to do the same) to ensure the position.

⁴ S12 & 13 Scottish Public Services Ombudsman Act 2002

⁵ See for example Cerebra Legal Entitlements Research Project Digest of Opinions 2013 'Jinny's Story' (access to Continence Services) and 'Claire's Story' in the 2014 Digest (School Transport) both accessible at <https://cerebra.org.uk/what-we-do/research/our-research-partners/university-of-leeds-school-of-law/student-research-papers/>

I. Inter-agency disputes

In disputes of this kind, the problem is not whether the child/young person or carer has needs, but which agency is responsible. It might be different departments within the same authority arguing about which of them is responsible, or a dispute between different authorities, or between the local authority and the NHS, or disputes between different NHS bodies – the permutations are endless. It might also be an argument between a public body and a private provider who was supposed to provide the support services (but has failed). The argument is often about ‘who pays’ and some managers may look like they are trying to ‘defend their budget’. Disputes of this kind can drag on for long periods during which the child/young person or carer feels like a powerless bystander.

How do you solve this? You could of course try and work out which authority is responsible, but this may be complex. You could decide to move to Belgium, but you would find that these problems exist throughout the world – they are central to all bureaucracies.

Where the argument is between two public bodies, our preliminary research suggests that the most effective response is to make a complaint that they are ‘failing to work together’. It is generally pointless to try and work out which one is responsible: this is not your job – it is for them to sort this out. This is the approach the Ombudsman in England took when considering a dispute between an NHS body and social services department. She found that they had acted unreasonably – that one of them should have ‘grasped the nettle’ and secured the support, before entering into protracted negotiations with the other on liability for the care costs.⁶

Even when it is reasonably clear which body is responsible, it will still be unreasonable for the other body to simply ‘walk away’ if it knows that the responsible body is not behaving properly. In such a case in England the High Court considered that it was ‘an inexcusable failure of good social work practice to ‘wash its hands’ of the family in this way’.⁷

The education authority are able to insist on assessment and where appropriate assistance from agencies such as NHS and Social Services in most cases.⁸ It is worth asking your education authority to make a referral for you or with you if you feel you require assistance from these agencies and you have been unable to make progress by yourself.

6 Complaint no 96/C/3868 against Calderdale MBC 24 November 1998 para 30.

7 R (AM) v (1) Havering LBC and Tower Hamlets LBC (2015) EWHC 1004 (Admin) para 46.

8 Education (Additional Support for Learning) (Scotland) Act 2004

Where the dispute is between a public body and the private provider it commissioned to provide your support. In such cases it is the public body to which the complaint should be made – it is responsible even though it chose to delegate this to a private agency.⁹

Proposed solution

Don't try and work out who is responsible – complain about them both for not working together, for not 'grasping the nettle'. A precedent complaint letter is at page 32.

⁹ The English Ombudsman has, for example, criticised a council for failing to monitor properly a care agency contract which she considered placed 'the most vulnerable members of the community at serious risk' and was 'simply unacceptable and constitute(d) maladministration': complaint no 05/C/08592 against Liverpool CC, 17 January 2007, paras 30–31.

2. No such word as “can’t”

Public bodies have a number of duties to provide all manner of support for children or young people with additional support needs, disabled people and carers. The various Acts that cover education, health and social care support are needs driven and place few limitations on what can be done. This means that they are not allowed to have 'blanket policies' about what they won't do – unless the law permits this. In a few cases the law does restrict what can be done – e.g. social services cannot provide certain health services and there are limitations on what can be done for people subject to immigration controls.

If an Act states that authorities have a duty to provide a range of services to support disabled children and young people or that the NHS should be a comprehensive service,¹⁰ then it is generally unlawful for a public body to have a fixed policy of not doing something or other. In legal language this is referred to as a 'fettering of a discretion'.

The Cerebra research programme has encountered many examples of such inflexible policies of this kind,¹¹ including:

- we can't do this for 6 months;
- we don't provide child care to enable you to stay in work;
- we don't do separate parent carers assessments;
- we don't provide respite care at the weekends/in the evenings;
- our department doesn't fund residential placements;
- due to cutbacks we don't provide this anymore;
- we don't provide transport if the school is less than 3 miles from your home;
- we don't provide more than four continence pads per day.

When front line workers explain that this or that “can't be done”, they are probably unaware that this is wrong – it is simply that their council/ NHS body has got into bad habits and they don't realise that what it has customarily done is actually unlawful and could be described as discrimination in some cases.

¹⁰ S1 National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 (c.29).

¹¹ Examples of this kind are given in J Read and L Clements, Disabled Children and the Law (Jessica Kingsley 2001); and J Morris, 'They said what?' (Joseph Rowntree Foundation 2004).

Proposed solution

The first step is to 'get it in writing'. Generally this will require a letter/email along the lines of precedent letter number 3 at page 33. This refers to the "we don't do" / "we can't do that" comment and then requires that the public body clarify what its policy is. The letter serves two purposes: it is evidence that something was said and it also gives the public body an opportunity to 'backtrack' and to explain that there is no such 'rigid' policy. Sometimes it will state that 'in general' it will not do (whatever it is), but that in appropriate/exceptional circumstances it is prepared to do this.

This will then require a clarification as to what it means by 'appropriate/exceptional' and also for evidence as to when it has in fact done this. Courts and Ombudsmen are wary of public bodies that say that their policies are flexible, but can't point to any evidence of flexibility in practice. For example, in the case of Shaw v. Strathclyde Regional Council 1988 SLT 313, it was noted that the Council's approach was to "accept that a parent in receipt of income below certain levels would suffer such hardship¹² and accordingly in such cases assistance is given in the form of a grant."¹³ The Council are not entitled to refuse to make provision for children who need it solely by reason that a grant has already been provided. Nor can the system of "clothing grants" be seen as the only way of discharging said duties.

12 s.54(2) of Education (Scotland) Act 1980

13 (per Lord Cullen at 314K) Shaw v. Strathclyde Regional Council 1988 SLT 313

3. The budget is spent

The problem is all too common: the public body agrees that the child, young person or carer has a need, but fails to meet that need because of a 'shortage of resources'. Not infrequently the immediate shortage is not of money but of physical resources – for example a lack of respite care places or trained staff. It can also arise with support services being reduced because (for example) "our budget has been cut" or simply that "a reassessment is necessary as we have to cut your support because of our financial problems"

The law does permit consideration of cost and resources. For example in respect of the provision of education, section 4(2)(b) of the Education (Additional Support for Learning) Act 2004 states that an education authority is not required to do anything that would result in 'unreasonable public expenditure'. Similarly when an authority requires making adjustments for a disabled person these are required to be 'reasonable'¹⁴.

Proposed solution

As is so often the case, the first step is to 'get it in writing': to dispatch a letter/email which not only refers to what was said, but also challenges the right of the public body to reduce services (or fail to meet a need) for the sole reason of budget difficulties.

Budgets are a 'political' as well as a legal issue – it is often worthwhile to write to (and arrange for a meeting with) your local councillor, cabinet member, MP or MSP and (if appropriate) to use the local media (press/radio/TV etc).

If the problem concerns a lack of physical resources, (e.g. insufficient therapists, or places at an after-school club or a respite care centre) the solution may be to require the public body to implement a process that will result in it being overcome and to develop a 'plan of action' with a timeline for what a 'reasonable body' would do in such cases to address the problem or to engage a private practitioner in the meantime – see precedent letter number 6 on page 34. In such cases it can also be effective to suggest a solution: i.e. identify an agency that is able to meet the identified need or to suggest that the public body make a direct payment which would enable you to purchase the relevant support service.

4. The panel/manager says “no”

Many local authorities use ‘panels’ of various types (sometimes termed ‘allocation panels’, ‘funding panels’ or ‘purchasing panels’) as a means of rationing services. Often a front line staff member will have spent a considerable amount of time assessing needs and will propose a plan (which may come in various guises) which is then overruled by a panel or a senior manager. This is generally unlawful, since needs must normally be met, regardless of resources (see previous page).

When asked to consider cases of this kind, Tribunals and Ombudsmen have generally asked why the manager or panel set aside the staff member’s assessment: what was their special knowledge of the case that gave them the right to overrule the assessment of the staff member? Not infrequently the panel/manager may;

- have spent little or no time with the person;
- not seen or experienced their environment;
- not spoken to concerned third parties;
- not read all the background and supporting evidence and so on.

Tribunals and Ombudsmen may want to know therefore what the evidence was that enabled the panel/manager to overrule the professional judgement of the staff member who had actually seen and assessed the person and read all the relevant papers.¹⁵

Proposed solution

As is so often the case, the first step is to ‘get it in writing’: to get in writing exactly who decided what and for a complaint to be made challenging the manager’s/panel’s decision. Precedent letters on pages 31 and 33 can be adapted for this purpose.

15 For details of some of these English Court and Ombudsman cases – see ‘Council Funding Panels’ at www.lukeclements.co.uk/resources/

5. Too difficult to think about

For example, the disabled person needs a complex package and this requires coordination and planning skills that the public body appears to lack. This is sometimes characterised as the 'file pushed to the end of the desk' problem – or the email that lingers in the inbox for weeks on end. The net effect is delay. This is a common problem (we all tend to put off difficult questions) and one that is particularly difficult for local authority/NHS staff who have excessive caseloads and who are spending their time fire-fighting and dealing with a backlog of urgent cases.

Proposed solution

Instead of demanding that the public body makes a decision on what to do, it often works to suggest what the solution could be (and, if possible, to give an example of where this type of solution has worked elsewhere). In 'Getting to Yes'¹⁶, the authors explain the importance of not thinking that 'solving their problem is their problem'. If you are able, you should try and come up with a solution. This may mean that you have to try to identify an agency or organisation that is able to provide the support required. This approach is of particular relevance in cases such as transition (into adulthood) planning. Here you may need to take on the role of project manager – to identify the possible providers of support etc and then 'sell' this solution to the public body; in marketing terms this is known as 'solution-based selling'.

There will be many problems that you are unable to solve, even with the help of social media networks/local support groups. Problems like finding suitable local supported living accommodation or specially trained care staff or the public body recruiting more therapists.

In such cases our preliminary research suggests that recasting this 'substantive problem' as a 'process' solution may work. In ordinary language, this means accepting that it is a difficult problem and asking yourself "what would a reasonable public body do in such a situation?" The answer will generally be that it would pull its finger out and prepare a plan of action – with deadlines for each stage – so that within a reasonable period of time the problem will be sorted.

Precedent letter number 7 at page 34 can be adapted for such cases.

The answer to all difficult problems is not that the family must have a direct payment (i.e. sort it out themselves). Direct payments can be empowering and a good way of meeting needs; they can also be disempowering.

¹⁶ Roger Fisher, William Ury and Bruce Patton, Getting to Yes (Random House 2011) p61.

6. Delay

Delay is one of the most common problems encountered, and it is one of the most difficult to address. Often the problem is that the public body worker has an excessive caseload and in reality is unable to deal with all their cases properly. As a result they may try to deal with the most urgent and eventually go off sick. Often they have insufficient training and the department may make excessive use of 'agency' staff.

Delay is a devious creature: it creeps up slowly, initially unnoticed and later on becomes difficult to pin down. A promise is made in good faith that something will be done by a specified date. This is not put in writing, but you honestly believe it will happen. For one reason or another it doesn't happen, but a new timescale is given and this is also done in good faith. Someone falls ill, someone changes job and 'events' intrude and by that time, a year has passed and you are still waiting. It is then that you may wish that you had complained earlier and that you had got those early undertakings in writing.

Proposed solutions

Delay calls for a complaint – and generally it calls for an early complaint. As soon as things start to drift a complaint should be made: one that does not personalise the problem, but merely puts down a marker that the drift has to stop. See precedent letter number 1 at page 31.

As with all complaints, the letter should set out deadlines by which the public body should undertake the necessary corrective action to ensure that the needs are met as soon as possible. Complaints can, in appropriate cases, highlight the fact that the public body is profiting from its delay for example that by unreasonably delaying providing respite care (or failing to secure sufficiently skilled care assistant's etc) it has improperly avoided paying for this support and so financially benefited.

When making a complaint about delay it can help to stress the harm it is causing. As we note on page 9 children don't stop growing: children don't hang around while the public body gets itself sorted. Delay is particularly harmful for young people, action should be taken against this. One useful technique is to point to the double standards of some public bodies: for example, schools often threaten parents where there has been a single 'non-attendance' by the child stating that 'even one day missed has an impact on a child'. This phrase can be used when complaining about a school or local authority's failure which has had the same effect. Complaints about delay often arise in cases that require coordination by more than one agency – for example a local authority and an NHS body. There are statutory timetables which require to be complied with in relation to dealing with a request for a co-ordinated support plan and the drawing of this plan.¹⁷ Failure to comply with this plan gives rise to appeal rights to the Additional Support Needs Tribunal¹⁸.

¹⁷ Chapter 5 Para 35 <https://www.gov.scot/publications/supporting-childrens-learning-statutory-guidance-education-additional-support-learning-scotland/>

¹⁸ Health and Education Chamber, First-tier Tribunal for Scotland, 6th Floor, Glasgow Tribunals Centre, 20 York Street, Glasgow G2 8GT Telephone: 0141 302 5863

7. “I don’t have authority to ...”

A power vacuum exists. This problem can take several forms. For example, there is general agreement that you need something – but no-one seems to know who has the power to make it actually happen. Another scenario is that you have a condition that doesn’t fit the public body’s departmental design.

Proposed solutions

Where a power vacuum exists – be it that no-one seems to have the power to agree a course of action or no team appears to have been allocated responsibility for you – it is generally best to write a letter of complaint and address it to the most senior person in the public body and copy this letter to the Monitoring Officer (see jargon buster on page 27) and other key players.¹⁹

The letter asks that someone within the authority ‘grasps the nettle’ and in this respect is similar to the approach in ‘interagency’ disputes (see page 13).

The same approach works for situations where you are falling between two stools – the public body doesn’t have any particular team whose terms of reference cover your condition. In this case the letter accepts that the public body is (for example) entitled to limit access to its learning disability team to people with an IQ below 70 – but that you need to know which team in the authority caters for your needs: “that’s fine. I understand that you don’t deal with this, but can you tell me who does?”

¹⁹ This could be your MSP, and if the problem is with a local authority – the Chair of the relevant committee – these can be found by a Google search for the home page of the organisation and clicking on something like ‘who we are’ or searching ‘councillors’ or ‘governing board’.

8. Personalities

Problems can result from a personality clash: the child, young person or carer labels the official as high handed and/or the public body labels the child, young person or carer as impossible to deal with. Working for a cash strapped public body can be stressful – sometimes as stressful as ensuring that your needs as a child, young person or carer are addressed properly. Officials working in difficult environments can develop coping mechanisms and adhering to strict rules and growing a ‘thick skin’.

Children/young people/carers also develop coping mechanisms. They can become combative – constantly challenging and complaining – in order to secure appropriate support. Many recognise (and regret) that the system has forced them to become ‘difficult’: in so doing they are describing a traumatic injury to their personality; inflicted by the very institutions created to provide them with support. ‘Warrior Mothers’²⁰ is a description that has been used to describe parents ‘fighting for understanding and support’ for their children. It is important for both public bodies and carers to recognise that personality clashes are inevitable in such difficult environments and indeed engendered by them.

20 Extract taken from B Lashewicz, J Mitchell, M Salami and S Cheuk Understanding and Addressing Voices of Adults with Disabilities within their Family Caregiving Contexts: Implications for Capacity, Decision-making and Guardianship—Legal Capacity, Decision-Making and Guardianship (Law Commission of Ontario 2014) p.4 – the reference here however is to ‘Warrior-Hero Mothers’; see also Sara Ryan and Katherine Runswick Cole, ‘From Advocate to Activist? Mapping the Experiences of Mothers of Children on the Autism Spectrum’ in the Journal of Applied Research in Intellectual Disabilities 2009, 22, 43–53; Michelle Daly Warrior Mums and Yvonne Newbold Special Parents (Amity Books 2014).

Proposed solutions

Many guides to dispute resolution techniques emphasise the importance of ‘separating the people from the problem’. In ‘Getting to Yes’²¹ for example, the authors consider a number of techniques, including: not blaming the other party for your problem; discussing each other’s perceptions; and looking for opportunities to act inconsistently with their perceptions. Detachment is also essential and the use of a third party (friend or advocate) can help. Although it will often be useful to address letters/emails of complaint to another member of the public body (i.e. the Monitoring Officer/a senior manager), the evidence suggests that the ‘tone’ of such correspondence needs to be set with considerable care.

Resolving personality disputes generally requires respect and an imaginative solution that reconciles the need for ‘face-saving’: one that avoids ‘the feeling or the appearance of backing down to the other side’.²² That said, there is also a need for carers to develop assertiveness skills and to be able to challenge professionals who act inappropriately. A number of excellent guides exist to help on this question²³

Mediation is a particularly useful mechanism of enhancing communication and maintaining a relationship with the local authority and school. Each local authority has a duty to offer mediation in relation to educational disputes²⁴.

21 Roger Fisher, William Ury and Bruce Patton Getting to Yes (Random House 2011) pp 19 – 41.

22 Ibid p 31.

23 See for example Carers UK Being Heard: A self-advocacy guide for carers \(2020\).

24 S15(1) Education (Additional Support for Learning) (Scotland) Act 2004

9. Highly contested fact disputes

This type of problem often originates in a single dispute which was mishandled. The problem then snowballs, generating a considerable bundle of documents and several new and distinct complaints. This category of problem is the one our research has encountered the greatest difficulty in resolving – because they are often the most complex. At their heart there is a sense of injustice that has become difficult to define. At their most extreme they come to be part of a person’s identity – and one that encompasses the idea of victimhood. The key problem may not be the outcome of a past complaint, but the manner in which it was handled and out of this sense of injustice, a multifaceted complaint develops in which there is little common ground and frequently a lack of trust and a clash of personalities.

One of the many difficulties in trying to resolve such problems is the fact that few agencies have sufficient time to go through the cardboard box full of documents, verify the facts (if possible) and come up with a solution.²⁵

²⁵ That is not to say that such time and effort is not warranted. There might be very considerable cost benefits for a public body to provide for an independent arbitration or adjudication process for long-standing disputes – not least where the likelihood is that it will be in close contact with the family for many years. Mediation may also be of assistance.

Proposed solutions

As this toolkit emphasises, a valuable approach involves asking the child, young person or carer “what do you want to happen as a result of this complaint?” That is generally easier to answer than trying to say what you are complaining about. However, this approach can be difficult for contested fact cases since they may be less about ‘outcomes’ and more about settling past injustices and forcing the public body to agree with something it might believe it has good grounds for contesting. In legal terms such cases are often about ‘having one’s day in court’. The idea is that the party has an opportunity to express their grievances about the way the other party has behaved and interpreted the evidence: to be heard by a respected impartial adjudicator.

This toolkit’s approach does not provide for a ‘day in court’, although the role of the adviser/supporter can be of some help in this respect: essentially to hear the child/young person or carer and to enable them to articulate their sense of injustice. Our preliminary research suggests that progress can be made with such disputes, where there is clear agreement to limit their scope to one or two specific issues which can produce some concrete benefits in terms of providing support for the child, young person or carer. To do this, however, some past grievances will have to be put aside and the focus moved to the future: “what do you want to happen to improve the situation?”

Preparing for a meeting

The more prepared you are for a meeting the more likely it is that you will make your desired vision a reality, or at least get somewhere close to it. So, before you attend a meeting make sure you are clear about who will attend and what the meeting is about. Be specific about what you want to discuss and what you want (reducing the number of issues or tasks to only those necessary to accomplish the goal). Conduct your research beforehand – know what the authority's policy is and what your child is entitled to, and ask for any copies of paperwork/reports from professionals to support your case.

At the meeting itself, ensure that everyone introduces themselves so you know who they are, and request that someone makes notes for you so that you can concentrate on what is being said. Ask for clarification if there are any parts that you do not understand and don't be afraid of asking questions or disagreeing with someone's comments (although try to stay calm and polite – avoid being defensive). Be prepared to negotiate and compromise, and do consider the possible alternatives. You may need time to consider proposals, and don't be fearful of suggesting ideas yourself. If new papers are produced ask for time to read them and if you feel you need a break from the meeting, perhaps because you are feeling emotional, request some time out or ask to reschedule. As the meeting draws to a close be sure all participants are clear on what has been agreed, any actions to be taken, as well as the standard by which success or failure will be measured, e.g. 'action one must be completed by X.' Most importantly, tell your story, and remember you are the expert on your child²⁶.

Very often it is important to have someone attend and support you – even if only by giving emotional support or to keep written notes of what is said. You are entitled to have a supporter or advocate attend meetings with you²⁷ as meetings can be stressful affairs. It is not only important to prepare for meetings – it is also good to let those present know that you have done this. One parent found it helpful to bring along a large ring binder filled with copies of the relevant law/policy documents and pages about your rights (each in divided sections with 'post it' tabs). Having minutes of previous meeting, correspondence and planning documents could also be helpful. This alone sends out a strong message and can change the atmosphere: that you know your rights – sometimes without having to actually open the binders during the meeting!

26 Supporting Children's Learning Code of Practice <https://www.gov.scot/publications/supporting-childrens-learning-statutory-guidance-education-additional-support-learning-scotland/>

27 S14 of the Education (Additional Support for Learning) (Scotland) Act 2004

Jargon Buster

ABC

An acronym used by police investigators: Assume nothing (i.e. trust no-one), Believe nobody, Check everything.

Adaptations

Local authorities are under a duty to make homes more accessible and safe for disabled people. Housing departments can make grants to help with these adaptations and social services have duties under the social care legislation to help too.

Additional Support Needs

A child or young person has additional support needs where, for whatever reason, the child or young person is, unable without the provision of additional support to benefit from school education²⁸. It is presumed that a child or young person has additional support needs if the child or young person is looked after by a local authority²⁹. Additional support is that which is additional to, or otherwise different from, the educational provision made generally for children or young persons of the same age in mainstream schools in that area³⁰.

Additional Support Plan (ASP)

An additional support plan describes the additional support needs and the type of support required. These plans set out short-term aims and goals for your child and the methods that will be used to help to reach them. This type of planning document is referred to by different names in different local authority areas, such as individual educational programme (IEP) or individual action plan (IAP).

28 S1(1) Education (Additional Support for Learning) (Scotland) Act 2004

29 Within the meaning of section 17(6) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995 as amended (c. 36)

30 S1(3)(a) Education (Additional Support for Learning) (Scotland) Act 2004

ADHD

Attention deficit hyperactive disorder

Advocate

This is someone, usually from an advocacy service, who will support you in what you want to say, who will represent your interests, helping you to secure your rights and obtain the services you need.

Not to be confused with a person qualified to appear in the High Court of Justiciary or Court of Session.

Arbitration

Arbitration is when an independent person (the arbitrator) listens to both sides of a dispute and makes a decision to resolve it. The Scottish Arbitration Centre in Edinburgh has facilities for arbitration, mediation and other dispute hearings: <https://scottisharbitrationcentre.org/>

Assessment

An 'assessment' decides whether a person has carer needs, care needs and/or additional support needs. You can request assessment in each of these areas. If you are unsure whether or not you meet the respective criteria you may wish to speak with local authority officials or obtain legal advice.

CAMHS

See 'Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services'.

Child's Plan

A Child's Plan – will be available for children who require extra support that is not generally available to address a child or young person's needs and improve their wellbeing. The Children and Young People (Scotland) Act 2014 ensures a single planning framework. This has been the subject of ongoing controversy and remains as yet unenforced. Various planning documents are used across the country for a similar purposes. Some areas continue to pilot the child's plan.

Co-ordinated Support Plan

A co-ordinated support plan is a plan which co-ordinates support between education and another relevant agency. Not all children and young people require a co-ordinated support plan and children and young people have to meet strict criteria to qualify.³¹ It is best to obtain legal advice particular to your own circumstances.

Carer

Someone (for example a parent, family member or friend) who provides care for a disabled person on an unpaid basis (and not as a formal 'volunteer').

Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services (CAMHS)

CAMHS are specialist NHS children and young people's mental health services. They are normally involved if the GP or social services are unable to provide suitable support. CAMHS should work with all young people in need of specialist help because of their mental health difficulties (and cannot refuse to support certain categories of people – for example people with Autism or ADHD).

Child

"Child" means a person who is not over school age (16 years) for education purposes only. In other circumstances a child is a person under 18 years.

Diagnosis

A medical diagnosis can be crucial in enabling an illness or disorder to be treated. It is not essential however in order to trigger a duty to provide support for a child or young person with additional support needs and/or a disability. Often it can take a considerable time to obtain an accurate diagnosis even though it is obvious that the child has substantial needs. In such a situation it would be unlawful for a public body to refuse to provide care and support, simply because there had been no diagnosis.

Direct payments

Direct payments (DP) are cash payments made by social services to people who have been assessed as needing support. There is a general right to have a DP (rather than having the authority provide the service). DPs for disabled children's needs are usually made to their parents. The amount of a DP must be sufficient to meet the person's assessed needs. In certain circumstances DPs can be used to employ family members (even if they live in the same house, the authority must consider this 'necessary').

Disabled Home Adaptations

Housing adaptations are intended to reduce the risk of accidents at home and reduce the need for home care or going into a care home.

Examples of adaptations include:

- Replacing a bath with a level access shower.
- Making it easier to get into and out of the house by widening doors or making a ramp.
- Fitting lower worktops in a kitchen.

Most changes to a building are covered by a 'mandatory grant'. This means that the council must give you a grant as long as you have been assessed as having a 'priority need'. Mandatory grants allow for up to 80% funding of the total cost of any alteration. Any grant level above 80% is calculated on a means-tested basis

Arrangements for getting help with other smaller changes, like fitting grab rails should be addressed to your local social work department.

Disability

A person has a disability if they have a physical or mental impairment which has a substantial and long-term adverse effect on their ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities³².

31 S2 Education (Additional Support for Learning) (Scotland) Act 2004

Disproportionate

Using a sledgehammer to crack a nut.

Fettering discretion

Where a public body has a power to do something (but not a 'duty') then it has a discretion – and in every case it must decide whether it will or will not exercise that discretion. It is not allowed to decide that it will never use its discretion (or that it will only ever use the discretion in a particular way). This is unlawful and referred to as 'fettering its discretion' (see pages 12 and 15).

GIRFEC (Getting it right for every child)

GIRFEC is the national approach in Scotland to improving outcomes and supporting the wellbeing of our children and young people by offering the right help at the right time from the right people.

Holidays

Something needed by everyone except it seems carers and disabled people.

Holistic

Taking account of the whole person and all their needs. This should sit within the wellbeing indicators to ensure GIRFEC compliance.

IQ (Intelligence Quotient)

The measure of the ability of a person to pass an IQ test. Some public bodies consider that only people who have an IQ below 70 can have a 'learning disability'. Generally this is irrelevant since a person may have additional support needs or be disabled even if they have a high IQ.

JBTWIU

'Just because the word is used' doesn't mean it's true. Public bodies are fond of jargon especially words that convey sincerity and purity/strength of purpose.

Maladministration

Where a public body behaves so unreasonably that the Scottish Public Services Ombudsman considers it to be unacceptable and requiring (at the very least) an apology. The Ombudsman considers that maladministration can include:³³ delay; incorrect action or failure to take any action; failure to follow procedures or the law; failure to provide information; inadequate record-keeping; failure to investigate; failure to reply; misleading or inaccurate statements; inadequate liaison; inadequate consultation; and broken promises.

Mediation

Mediation is a flexible process that can be used to settle disputes in a whole range of situations. Mediation involves an independent third party, the mediator, who helps people to agree a solution when there is a disagreement.

This is different to arbitration because the mediation will not advise of their opinion or make a decision on resolution. This is about parties having assistance to come to agreement.

<https://www.scottishmediation.org.uk>

Monitoring Officer

Every local authority must have a monitoring officer³⁴ whose job is to ensure that their authority does not act in a way that might amount to maladministration (see page 11). Generally this will be a senior lawyer.

33 The most quoted definition is that of a Cabinet Minister, Richard Crossman, who in 1967 who listed 'bias, neglect, inattention, delay, incompetence, ineptitude, perversity, turpitude and so on'. However, as a judge – Lord Denning – noted in 1979 'and so on would be a long and interesting list, clearly open-ended, covering the manner in which a decision is reached or discretion is exercised ...'

34 Section 5. Local Government and Housing Act 1989

NHS Continuing Healthcare

Where a person's disability or illness is so severe that their health and social care needs become the responsibility of the NHS instead of the social services authority. People with these needs are 'eligible for NHS Continuing Healthcare' funding. It does not matter where the person lives or who is providing their care (i.e. they might be living in the community and being cared for by their parents).

Ordinary lives

The right to live an ordinary life – 'it should not be regarded as an exotic idea for disabled children and those close to them to aspire to a quality of life comparable to that enjoyed by others who do not live with disability'.³⁵

Outcomes

Outcomes aim to identify the person's aspirations, goals and priorities and the idea is that assessments that focus on these break free from the shackles of thought processes tied to existing service models.

Panels

A group of officers who scrutinise decisions made by staff in the public body – particularly decisions that involve expenditure. These are referred to by different names across the country, for example, the resource group. See page 18.

Personal budget

Councils use a 'resource allocation system' (RAS) to calculate the disabled person's personal budget. The RAS will produce an 'indicative budget' upon which the support plan is based to ensure that the care package can be delivered. You have a legal right to have the RAS calculation explained in sufficient detail so that you can understand whether or not the amount proposed will meet the agreed services. You could consider using the complaints system or taking legal advice if you are not happy about the way in which help is going to be provided.

Purity of commissioning arrangements

Authorities must meet a person's needs and if there is only one way of doing this – then they must grasp that opportunity even if it conflicts with their systems. In an English case where a council failed to do this, the Ombudsman said that the disabled person's care had been 'entirely sacrificed to maintain the purity of the council's contractual arrangements (and that this) was a classic case of the council fettering its discretion, and was maladministration'.³⁶

Reassessment and reviews

Where a person is receiving care and support from a local authority or the NHS, then the care or child's plan should be kept under review. Reviews and, where necessary, reassessments should happen at least once a year. If on review the needs have increased – then the expectation is that the support will increase (and vice versa). Reviews 'must not be used as a mechanism to arbitrarily reduce the level of a person's care'. If at a review the authority is proposing to reduce the support available and if this means that a carer will have to take on additional care – the Ombudsman in England has held that it will be 'maladministration' for such a reduction to occur without assessing the carer and explicitly clarifying (and recording) whether she/he is 'able and willing' to provide the additional care. This is quite a complex area so if necessary seek independent advice at the earliest opportunity.

Reasonable

Reasonable is an important word and we considered it further at page 30. Public bodies must act reasonably. They must comply with the law, do what they have said they will do, keep you 35 J Read, et al Disabled children and the law: research and good practice, 2nd edn, Jessica Kingsley Publishers, 2006, p17.

36 Complaint no 99/B/00799 against Essex, 29 March 2001. 38 Department of Health, Care and Support Statutory Guidance 2014 (para 13.4).

informed, answer letters and emails promptly and tell you if things change (and why). If you think a public body has behaved unreasonably it may amount to 'maladministration'. Generally the best way of illustrating why something is unreasonable is to explain what 'a reasonable public body would have done in the situation' (see also letter 7 on page 34).

Respite care

Respite care is a service intended to benefit a carer and the person he or she cares for by providing a short break from caring tasks.

See Short breaks support.

Scottish Public Services Ombudsman (SPSO)

The Scottish Public Services Ombudsman (SPSO) is the final stage for complaints about councils, the National Health Service, housing associations, colleges and universities, prisons, most water providers, the Scottish Government and its agencies and departments and most Scottish authorities.

SHANARRI (Safe Healthy Active Nurtured Achieving Respected Responsible Included)

Also referred to as the wellbeing indicators. The indicators can be used to structure the information recorded about a child or young person and to monitor their progress across services.

Short breaks support

Short breaks support is sometimes referred to as 'respite care' or 'replacement care'. Local authorities are under a duty to provide such support to assist family carers of disabled children 'to continue to (provide care), or to do so more effectively, by giving them breaks from caring'. This support may be by way of a sitting service, an afterschool club or holiday club or overnight care away from the home (for example in a respite care centre or specialist short breaks fostering arrangement).

Local authorities must assess how much short breaks support a family needs and are then under a duty to provide this. It follows that a local authority cannot have a 'maximum' limit on how much support of this kind can be provided.

Support plan

See Co-ordinated Support Plan.

Support services

The law requires that assessed needs for social care services must be met. Where there is no suitable service, then the council must demonstrate that it is taking steps to arrange such services (see page 19). Councils cannot simply say 'we don't have anything suitable, so you will either have to use a service outside our area or you will have to arrange this yourself using a personal budget'. In a 1996 case³⁷ the court held that authorities had to adjust provision to meet need and not the other way around.

Transport

Local authorities are under a duty to provide transport support for some disabled children (e.g. to school or to a respite or community based service). The fact that the disabled child lives less than three miles from their school or is receiving Disability Living Allowance (DLA)/ PIP mobility allowance payments cannot (on its own) be a reason for a local authority refusing to provide them with transport assistance. Further information in relation to transport can be found through the link below³⁸.

Young Person

'Young person' means a person over school age (16 years) who has not attained the age of 18 years but includes a person who has attained the age of 18 years while a pupil at a school, and has since attaining that age, remained a pupil at that or another school.

37 R v Islington LBC ex p Rixon (1997-98) 1 CCLR 119.

38 <https://enquire.org.uk/3175/wp-content/uploads/2020/02/transport-school.pdf>

What must public bodies do?

Public bodies – like all of us – must obey the law. If the law says local authorities are under a duty to assess the needs of carers (which it does) then it is simply unlawful for an authority to say ‘we don’t do carers’ assessments’. If the law says that a local authority must meet the particular needs of a disabled person then an authority has to do this. .

Public bodies must ‘act reasonably’: this is a ‘principle of public law’. One of the best ways of deciding what is reasonable is to ask yourself the question: “in this particular situation what would a reasonable person do?” Reasonable people don’t have magic wands – but they do try to resolve problems as sensibly and as quickly as they can; reasonable people listen to what is said and make decisions; reasonable people ‘do the best that they can’. Generally that is all the law and ombudsmen ask of public bodies.

Reasonable authorities (for example):

- Make decisions on the basis of the relevant evidence

They take into account all the available evidence before making a decision and don’t ignore (or refuse to consider) relevant considerations. If the evidence is ‘largely one way’ then reasonable authorities make decisions on this basis.

- Disregard irrelevant factors

A local authority that decides not to provide support because “its budget has been spent” will be taking into account an irrelevant factor (i.e. the state of its finances) if the law requires the need to be met regardless of resources (which it generally does).

- Don’t have ‘blanket policies’

Authorities are allowed to develop general policies for the way certain situations are handled, but these policies cannot be fixed – there must always be discretion to depart from them. So an authority can say (for example) that in general it will make direct payments at a rate of £ 13.00 per hour for personal care assistance. However if this is shown to be an inadequate rate in a particular case, it must be prepared to increase the amount. If it refused – saying that this was the maximum – then this would be unlawful. Lawyers refer to this as ‘fettering a discretion’.

- Give reasons for their decisions

Authorities should give reasons for decisions which have significant consequences – especially if there is competing evidence. In such cases the reasons need not ‘be elaborate ... but they should be sufficient to enable a person to understand in broad terms why the decision was reached.’³⁹

- Act without delay

Public bodies must act without delay. What amounts to ‘unreasonable delay’ will depend on how urgent the need is and the harm that delay may cause. Often it is not difficult to identify unreasonable delay, particularly when the public body has missed its own deadline. In some cases the law/guidance lays down specific timescales.

39 Stefan v The General Medical Council (Medical Act 1983) [1999] UKPC 10 at para 32.

Precedent letters

The letters that follow can also be downloaded from our website where there is a small library of 'template' letters (<https://cerebra.org.uk/get-advice-support/legal-and-financial/template-letters/>). Several of these have English law or Welsh law versions.

They include, for example, letters: requesting an assessment of the families' needs; complaining about a failure to finalise assessment; challenging a decision to reduce the support provided to a family; making a freedom of information request; etc.

Letter I

Formal complaint ⁴⁰

Please change or delete the purple text as appropriate.

(Your name)

(Address)

(Tel)

(E-mail)

(Date)

Complaints Officer

(Address)

Dear Complaints Officer

My son/daughter: (name)

Date of birth: (e.g. 12th March 2007)

Formal complaint

I ask that you treat this letter as a formal complaint concerning the discharge by (authority/trust) of its functions in respect of (myself) (my son/daughter). I require the complaint to be investigated at the earliest opportunity. Although I am making a formal complaint I do not want it to interfere with the good working relationship I have with (name of person in authority/trust) or to in any way delay or interfere with the support arrangements provided to (me/my son/daughter).

My complaint is:

(here set out as precisely as possible:

- (a) what it is that is being complained about
- (b) the names of the key staff who the complaints investigator will need to speak to;
- (c) the dates of the relevant acts/omissions;

If possible also enclose copies of any relevant papers)

What I want to achieve by making this complaint is (here set out as precisely as possible what you want to be the result of your complaint: i.e. an apology, a changed service provision, an alteration to practice, interim support arrangements (and if so – timescales for this), etc.)

⁴⁰ This letter can be found at <https://cerebra.org.uk/download/complain-about-a-council-health-body/>

I understand that you will wish to contact me in order to investigate this complaint. I suggest that this be done by (here give telephone/email contact details and the time/days you are normally available etc.).

I also understand that in investigating this complaint you may need to share information with other relevant parties/agencies and also to access my records. I confirm that I am in agreement to you taking this action – so far as it is strictly necessary.

Yours faithfully

Letter 2

Complaint about an inter-agency dispute⁴¹

Letter has same general format as the precedent complaint letter 1 but with the following paragraphs and is sent to both agencies (see page 13):

I ask that you treat this letter as a formal complaint concerning the discharge by your (authority/trust) of its functions in respect of (myself) (my son/daughter). I require the complaint to be investigated at the earliest opportunity. Although I am making a formal complaint I do not want it to interfere with the good working relationship I have with (name of person in authority/trust) or to in any way delay or interfere with the support arrangements provided to (me/my son/daughter).

It appears to me that (I am) (my son/daughter is) not receiving the relevant support/services/assessment, purely because there is a disagreement between your authority and (name of other authority/trust) as to which of you is responsible; essentially that (I am) (my son/daughter is) 'piggy in the middle' and that (my) (my son's) (my daughter's) needs are suffering because of your inter-agency dispute.

Such behaviour is unacceptable, and I understand that it constitutes maladministration and a breach of public law. I understand that in such cases the courts and Ombudsman require that either you or (name of other authority) grasps the nettle and ensures (my) (my son's) (my daughter's) needs are met – before then entering into negotiations as to which of you is ultimately responsible⁴².

What I want to achieve by making this complaint is (here set out as precisely as possible what you want to be the result of your complaint: i.e. a changed service provision, support arrangements, etc.)

I understand that you will wish to contact me in order to investigate this complaint. I suggest that this be done by (here give telephone/email contact details and the time/days you are normally available etc.).

I also understand that in investigating this complaint you may need to share information with other relevant parties/agencies and also to access my records. I confirm that I am in agreement to you taking this action – so far as it is strictly necessary.

⁴¹ This template letter is also at <https://cerebra.org.uk/download/council-and-or-health-officials-are-arguing-about-whos-responsible-for-helping-us/>

⁴² Complaint no 96/C/3868 against Calderdale MBC 24 November 1998 para 30.

Letter 3

Can I have that in writing – when things are said (or not said)⁴³

Letter has same general format as precedent letter 1 but with the following paragraphs:

I refer to my previous correspondence with your authority concerning the additional support needs of / care and support needs of (child's name) and of my needs as a parent carer (and the needs of (names of any other person e.g. your other children or partner)).

I am troubled by something that was said today, and seek your urgent clarification on this question.

At (time/date/place) I was informed by (name of person) who is I believe a (give the person's job title) in your (authority/trust) that (here include statement).

It may be that I misheard what (name of person) said – and it is for this reason that I am seeking urgent clarification of this issue. If it is indeed the policy of your (authority/trust) that (here repeat what was said), then I understand that this constitutes maladministration and indeed a breach of public law.

I ask for urgent clarification on this question. If, however, I have not received a response in writing by close of business on (date), I will have no option but to assume that this is indeed the policy of your (authority/trust) and so seek the appropriate remedy.

Letter 4

Fettering of discretion letter ~ key paragraphs⁴⁴

Letter has same general format as precedent letter 1 but with the following:

It would appear that your authority has therefore adopted a fixed policy of not (here explain what the blanket policy is). I understand that such a policy amounts to a 'fettering of your discretion' in relation to this question and is therefore unlawful.

I ask for urgent clarification on this question. If, however, I have not received a response in writing by close of business on (date) I will have no option but to assume that this is indeed the policy of your authority and so seek the appropriate remedy.

Letter 5

Failure to answer first letter⁴⁵

Letter has same general format as precedent letter 1 but with the following:

I refer to my previous email/letter of the (date) a copy of which I enclose.

I have not received a response to this email/letter. If I fail to have a response from you by (date) I will have no option but to make a formal complaint to your authority and to your monitoring officer (to whom I am copying this letter/email). I ask therefore that I receive a reasoned response to my earlier letter/email of the (date) by the (date).

43 This template letter is also at <https://cerebra.org.uk/download/we-want-something-confirmed-in-writing/>

44 This template letter is also at <https://cerebra.org.uk/download/the-council-has-adopted-a-fixed-policy-and-says-we-dont-cant-do-that/>

45 This template letter is also at <https://cerebra.org.uk/download/we-havent-had-an-answer-to-our-first-letter-2/>

Letter 6

Lack of resources⁴⁶ Care Services

Letter has same general format as precedent letter 1 but with the following:

I refer to my previous correspondence with your (authority/trust) concerning the care and support needs of (child's name) and of my needs as a parent carer (and the needs of) (names of any other person e.g. your other children or partner).

On the (time/date/place) I was informed by (name of person) that your (authority/trust) would not provide the necessary support to meet (my/my son/daughter's) need for care because of your (authority's/trust's) 'resource shortages'.

I understand that the law places a statutory duty on your (authority/trust) to provide support to meet eligible needs. I would be grateful if you would therefore provide me, within seven days of the date of this letter, with an explanation in clear terms why your (authority/trust) is not meeting (my/my son/daughter's) eligible needs for (describe here what the need is for – i.e. 'respite care'/etc).

Letter 6 A

Lack of resources⁴⁷ Education

Letter has same general format as precedent letter 1 but with the following:

I refer to my previous correspondence with your (authority/trust) concerning the additional support needs of (child's name).

On the (time/date/place) I was informed by (name of person) that your (authority/trust) would not provide the necessary support to meet (my son/daughter's) need for care because of your (authority's/trust's) 'resource shortages'.

I understand that the law places a statutory duty on your (authority/trust) to provide support to meet additional support needs. I would be grateful if you would therefore provide me, within seven days of the date of this letter, with an explanation in clear terms why your (authority/trust) is not meeting (my son/daughter's) needs for (describe here what the need is for).

Letter 7

Failure of local authority to identify suitable support arrangements⁴⁸

Letter has same general format as precedent letter 1 but with the following paragraphs:

I refer to my previous email/letter of the (date) a copy of which I enclose.

On the (date) your (authority/trust) accepted that it was necessary to provide support to meet (my son/daughter's) needs and in particular to (describe the support that is needed). Although I appreciate that there may have been difficulties in securing a service to meet this need, I am concerned about the delay that is occurring. I understand that public law requires that your (authority/trust) acts reasonably

⁴⁶ This template letter is also at <https://cerebra.org.uk/download/letter-to-challenge-a-failure-to-provide-support-because-of-a-lack-of-resources-2/>

⁴⁷ This template letter is also at <https://cerebra.org.uk/download/letter-to-challenge-a-failure-to-provide-support-because-of-a-lack-of-resources-education/>

⁴⁸ This template letter is also at <https://cerebra.org.uk/download/letter-to-challenge-delays-in-arranging-support/> in such cases – and it appears to me that in this case a reasonable public body would have a clear plan of action – with deadlines for each stage.

For example, it would (here set out what you think would be reasonable – for example:

i) undertake an assessment and confirm the eligible needs within 3 weeks;

ii) within 2 weeks thereafter it will identify a suitable respite care arrangement – or failing something suitable:

(a) put in place a short term 'stop-gap' arrangement – that will (insert details) ; and

(b) within this period will identify a suitable more 'durable' arrangement and have this up and running within 4 weeks).

I would be grateful if you could respond by (date).

Letter 8

The public body has placed you in an 'impossible position'⁴⁹

Letter has same general format as precedent letter 1 but with the following:

I refer to my previous correspondence with your authority concerning the care and support needs of (child's name) and of my needs as a parent carer (and the needs of) (names of any other person e.g. your other children or partner).

As a result of our complaint I have been told by (name of officer) that instead of providing the support that (I/my daughter/son) needs, your authority is proposing that we go back to square one and have a further assessment. (I/my daughter/son) (have/has) already been through this process and I understand that there is abundant guidance and research condemning inappropriate (and delaying) re-assessments.

Your (officer name) responded, by stating that if I did not agree to this assessment within 10 days, my refusal would be 'noted'. This action places me in an impossible position. I am concerned to have the identified support needs put in place without delay and believe that restarting the assessment cycle will inevitably lead to considerable delay (at best). However if I refuse what I believe to be an unreasonable request – this too will cause delay and my refusal will be used to suggest that I am being uncooperative and this then used as a justification for further delay.

I have no choice therefore but to agree to the assessment – but I reserve the right to refer the Ombudsman to this letter if my complaint proceeds to (her/him) for maladministration. If there is any delay in undertaking suitable assessments and any further delay in securing the identified support needs, I will have no option but to make direct contact with the Ombudsman's office for an interim intervention.

⁴⁹ This template letter is also at <https://cerebra.org.uk/download/letter-to-explain-that-the-councils-proposal-for-another-assessment-puts-the-parent-carer-in-an-impossible-position/>

Letter 9

Arranging an assessment

Letter has same general format as precedent letter 1 but with the following:

I am writing to request a carer's assessment under the Carers (Scotland) Act 2016. Please ensure this assessment is fully compliant with the 2016 Act and that my views are adequately considered. I have been caring for (name and address of the person you care for) since (date). OR I will be caring for (name of the person you will soon start caring for) from (date). S/he is my (daughter/son). (Name of person you care for) needs help because (outline the disabilities the person you care for has). The main things s/he needs help with are (e.g. having a bath, dressing etc). The main difficulties I have are (list the things you need, e.g. a break from caring). Please contact me at the above address/on the above phone number (State how you prefer to be contacted and, if by phone, if there is a good time to contact you) to let me know when you will be able to carry out my assessment.

Letter 10

Assessment of need - Education

Letter has same general format as precedent letter 1 but with the following:

I am writing to you in respect of my child, (Child's name). My child is currently a pupil at (Name of School).

This is a formal assessment request, in terms of Section 8 of the Education (Additional Support for Learning) (Scotland) Act 2004. Please arrange for (Child's name) to have the following assessment(s)/examination(s) carried out:

(List the various assessments or examinations requested for the child, being as specific as you can be. Educational Psychologist involvement may provide a good overview to assist if you are unclear of the source of difficulty. Speech and Language Therapy, Occupational Therapy or CAMHS may also be relevant.)

The reasons for this request are as follows:

(Detail the child's needs and the factors giving rise to those needs)

(Detail the background of the child's education and any issues or problems arising)

(Give any other relevant information or reasons for the request)

I look forward to hearing from you.

Letter 11

Request for assessment of need of a Co-ordinated Support Plan

Letter has same general format as precedent letter 1 but with the following:

I am writing as the parent of (Child's name). (Child's name) is currently a pupil at (Name of School).

This letter is a formal request, in terms of Section 6 of the Education (Additional Support for Learning) (Scotland) Act 2004, that (Name of Council Authority) establish whether or not (Child's name) requires a Co-ordinated Support Plan (CSP).

The reasons for this request are as follows:

(Detail the child's needs and the factors giving rise to those needs)

(Detail the background of the child's education and any issues or problems arising)

(Give details of any involvement (or required involvement) by appropriate agencies)

(Give any other relevant information or reasons for the request)

I look forward to hearing from you within the eight week statutory deadline period.

Letter 12

Review of Co-ordinated Support Plan

Letter has same general format as precedent letter 1 but with the following:

I am (Parent's name), parent of (Child's name). (Child's name) is currently a pupil at (Name of School) and has a Co-ordinated Support Plan (CSP).

This letter is a formal request, in terms of Section 10(4) of the Education (Additional Support for Learning) (Scotland) Act 2004, that (Name of Council) carry out a review of (Child's name)'s CSP.

The reasons for this request are as follows:

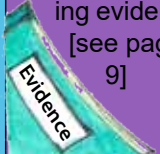

(Detail the child's needs and the factors giving rise to those needs)

(Detail the background of the child's education and any issues or problems arising)

(Give any other relevant information or reasons for the request, and particularly on why a review is required early)

I look forward to hearing from you at your earliest opportunity.

Real Snakes and Fantasy Ladders

48 Letter from public body saying a reassessment required [see p 28]	47  Everything goes well	46 Service is dreadful: complain to public body [see page 31]	45 Private company commissioned to provide service	44 Council identify a private company to provide the support needs in the care plan	43  Your elderly father has a stroke
37 Local authority agree care plan	38	39	40 NHS and social services decide to dis-integrate: miss 2 turns	41 	42 Without warning your child unexpectedly turns 18
YOUR CARE PLAN
36	35 	34 Local authority and NHS disagree which is responsible – miss 2 turns [see p 13]	33	32 	31 The NHS decides to reorganise its structure – miss a turn
25 Staff member on long-term sick (work related stress) miss a turn	26 	27 Public body agrees to investigate your complaint	28 Staff member takes early retirement (due to re-organisation) miss a turn	29	30 You marry the leader of the Council. Advance to 47: stay there – Game Over
24 	23 NHS and social services decide to integrate: miss 2 turns	22	21 Social services reorganises its structure – miss a turn	20 The panel says no [see page 18]	19 Senior officer agrees to fund package in full
13	14	15 You come up with a solution & the public body agrees to act on it [see page 19]	16	17 No response: send follow-up letter page 33	18
12 Your daughter qualifies as a barrister 	11	10 No response from public body – send complaint letter page 31	9 Case referred to social worker with no case-load	8 	7
1 Buy lever arch file and note pad: enter date on note pad and file it 	2 Join parent support group and make your first 'tweet'	3 Prepare letter to public body – see www.difficultbox.com precedent letter 1.	4 Send letter to public body. Keep copy in your file.	5 Gather supporting evidence [see page 9] 	6 Prepare/copy supporting evidence ready for the assessment meeting [see page 24]

The findings of this report are those of the author, not necessarily those of Cerebra.

First edition: 2016

This edition: 2021

Review date: 2024

Working wonders for children with brain conditions

Registered Charity no 1089812 Company no. 4336208

Postal Address

Cerebra
The MacGregor Office Suite
Jolly Tar Lane
Carmarthen
SA31 3LW

Tel: 01267 244200

www.cerebra.org.uk

UNIVERSITY OF LEEDS